

Vocational Training: fostering entrepreneurial culture

Fundación Repsol's first Entrepreneurship in Vocational Training program

Repsol volunteers

And specialized trainers

Bring innovation and

Vocational Training students together

Nestor Guerra: The two main aims of these sessions are, firstly, to bring entrepreneurs closer tools such as design thinking and lean start up so that they can learn to use these tools and processes in a fun and enjoyable manner, and, secondly, to develop skills that will make them more employable in the near future, enabling them to work in companies with these entrepreneurial skills.

A Coruña, Cartagena, Puertollano, and Tarragona

27 educational centers

239 students

Nestor Guerra: It is increasingly easy to be an entrepreneur. This is not because entrepreneurship is simple — it is always difficult and has an extremely high failure rate — but because more and more tools are available, there is greater legal protection, and technology is becoming increasingly cheap and accessible.

Four winning projects

New ideas for the future

Nestor Guerra: Something positive that all Vocational Training students have in common is that they are very adept at technology, using it in a variety of ways and applying it to add real value. This is also very important to note. This is, without doubt, a fascinating generation. This is a highly trained generation. The most qualified generation to date stand here before us.